James Marrow was the oldest man actively engaged in the training and thought, however, that this hall will be who now resides in the northern part of that State.

Went West at Sixteen.

Mr. Marrow went West when about eixteen and found employment with a racing stable at Woodstock, Ill. He soon became an adept "swipe," and in three years had been graduated to the place of trainer and driver. He followed this profession with success until the civil war came on, when he went into Company F. Ninety-fifth Illinois Volunteers, as first lieutenant.

After the war closed he returned to Woodstock and resumed training and driving, and remained at this occupation until a week ago, when he was attacked with the ailment that resulted in his death. When he was taken sick he had charge of the horses owned by Mr. John
